SYNOPSIS OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE
ANNUAL MEETING OF THE CORPORATION.

WATERTOWN, October 9, 1918.

The annual meeting of the corporation, duly summoned, was held to-day at the institution, and was called to order by the president, Hon. Francis Henry Appleton, at 3 P.M.

The proceedings of the last meeting were read and approved.

The annual report of the trustees was accepted and ordered to be printed, together with the usual accompanying documents.

The annual report of the treasurer was presented, accepted and ordered to be printed.

Voted, That acts and expenditures, made and authorized by the Board of Trustees, or by any committee appointed by said Board of Trustees, during the corporate year closed this day, be and are hereby ratified and confirmed.

The corporation then proceeded to ballot for officers for the ensuing year, and the following persons were unanimously elected:—

President. — Hon. Francis Henry Appleton.

Vice-President. — George H. Richards.

Treasurer. — Albert Thorndike.

Secretary. — Edward E. Allen.

Trustees. — Mrs. George Angier, Francis Henry Appleton, Walter Cabot Baylies, William Endicott, Robert H. Hallowell, James A. Lowell, George H. Richards, and Richard M. Saltonstall.

The following persons were unanimously elected members of the corporation: — Mrs. Caroline S. Atherton, Mrs. Clara Bancroft Beatley, Miss Gazella Bennett, Miss Alice A. Burditt, Mrs. Cora L. Gleason, Miss Annie M. Kilham, Miss Mary H. Ladd,¹ Miss Harriet A. Littell, Mr. Arthur Lyman,¹ Miss Lucia Clapp Noyes, Miss Emilie Poulsson, Mrs. Robert M. Read and Mr. Joel West Smith.

The Director of the institution reported that, because the plans of the government for the re-education of its blinded soldiers involve bringing them together in a special plant for them, therefore he had not offered the government the use of special facilities at the Perkins Institution plant, as it was voted at last year's meeting he might do, but that he had been able to give aid through counsel and advice and through supply of special materials manufactured by the Howe Memorial Press.

Upon presentation of the matter by the Director, it was — Voted, That in case of explosion or disaster in the vicinity of Watertown, the temporary use of such of the institution grounds and buildings as the institution could properly relinquish, in view of its obligations to its pupils and staff, be tendered to any organization such as the Shelter Committee of the Civilian Relief of the American Red Cross in Boston.

The meeting then adjourned.

EDWARD E. ALLEN,

Secretary.

PERKINS INSTITUTION AND MASSACHUSETTS SCHOOL FOR THE BLIND,
WATERTOWN, October 9, 1918.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: — The number of pupils attending this school at any one time rarely exceeds 270, but the number of the staff of teachers and officers and of the help in so complete a boarding school as the Perkins Institution remains constant, being 128, or nearly one half the number of the pupils. It is chiefly this necessarily large proportion of staff which lifts the pupil per capita cost above that of other kinds of institutions; for, though the salaries paid are moderate, their total makes a considerable budget. This past year the increased cost of food and coal and other supplies has been met rather anxiously by our treasurer, for his income from most sources has diminished. And the income seems likely to be still less this next year, which promises to be one of ever-growing expenditures.

It should be noted that last year we had to draw upon our principal to the extent of $7000. It is not true, therefore, as was publicly stated at a hearing in the State House before the Constitutional Convention, that the Perkins Institution is a great, rich school which accepts State aid and lays by an annual surplus. This is not the fact, and it is markedly not true in recent years, looking at the three departments together, although to be sure its large Kindergarten Department, or lower school, which is a separate trust, has not always spent all of its income. The Kindergarten has never received aid from the Commonwealth, the $30,000 which Massachusetts has been paying annually to the Perkins Institution having gone into the Institution funds proper, as a partial offset to the expense of caring for and teaching the State's pupils of that department. This contribution amounts to about $300 for each such pupil, whereas their actual per capita cost has exceeded that sum ever since 1896. While the Perkins Institution has not had much concern over the knowledge that for all these years it has been giving unsurpassed care and training to the State's pupils without expectation or even desire of full financial return, the Trustees regret that, in a public debate upon an important constitutional amendment, greater care was not exercised in stating facts which, if accurately presented, would have shown the Institution to have been doing work which would without its aid have had to be done at greatly increased expense to the public.

However, the so-called Anti-Aid Act having become law, the Perkins Institution is now beginning its new school year with 180 Massachusetts pupils. The State having made its customary payment this past year, we have no doubt that a new and mutually satisfactory arrangement can be effected between us and the Commonwealth, through the instrumentality of the Special Commission on Education and the State Board of Education, whereby we shall be enabled to continue the schooling of its youthful blind. As for those 80 or 90 pupils who come to us from other States, we have raised the per capita tuition charge for them from $300 to $350 at the lower school and to $400 at the upper School; similarly in the case of the few private pay pupils. From the responses of the New England State officials concerned, there is no doubt that they are still glad to avail themselves of the unsurpassed facilities which the Perkins Institution agrees to furnish at considerably less than cost.

All who are working in behalf of the blind feel that the present is a time of promise for all the physically handicapped; and the thoughtful among the blind themselves have been quickened by this feeling. A higher sense of the responsibility of government towards its unfortunate citizens seems to have been crystalized by the great war, together with a new recognition of the fact that the labor and the happiness of the handicapped can be public assets of tremendous economic value. Further, a spirit making for a new neighborliness is growing and spreading among the people, which is particularly evident among women of leisure, several hundreds of whom are known to be preparing themselves for helpfulness to the blinded soldiers alone. There have been over 200 of these women in and about Boston who have actually studied into the matter of how best to help and, in so doing, have necessarily had their attention drawn to the condition and needs of the blind who are always with us. They have visited all the Massachusetts resources for the blind, among them our school, where the pupils appear at their best, and so been impressed with the varied capacities of the blind under training.

A matter of fundamental importance which we have emphasized to these new and potential workers is that blindness does not classify, that our pupils are individuals with very different possibilities and are thus just like other groups of boys and girls, and that for many of them manual occupations are by no means necessary or even best after school days as means of self-support. The fact that special shops for the blind are eventually resorted to by numbers of our pupils who could do far better elsewhere is merely a proof that the average employer doesn't want blind labor. This, naturally, is deeply discouraging to our graduates who have become conscious of potential efficiency, and it serves measurably to embitter their lives. That the blind are commonly happy is, doubtless true within limits. How much happier they would be if society would act towards them as if they were needed in this workaday world!

The conditions indicated in the foregoing paragraph, — the reluctancy of the world to act the part of neighbor to the blind, which has always kept down the morale of our schools for them, — promise definite change and improvement as a result of the war. We must therefore see to it that the schools quicken the efforts of their pupils themselves through hope in their future, and so turn out ever greater numbers who can succeed in the world at large.

That the pendulum has already begun to swing that way is shown by this: the placement agent of the Massachusetts Commission for the Blind has been increasingly successful in getting employment for our blind people among the seeing, having so placed twenty this past summer. Within the year she has placed five as office typists where the dictaphone was in use. The immediate effect of such success has been magical upon the spirit of the school. It seems to teachers as though the pupils had never returned to their work with as much earnestness as they have this fall. And fewer have returned, — the attendance is smaller than usual, — a goodly number having obtained jobs for themselves and gone to work at them.

In order the better to recognize fitness in our pupils and to develop it, there has been added to the Perkins staff this year a vocational counsellor who is likewise placement agent for those of our pupils from outside Massachusetts, and also intermediary between the institution and the parents of its pupils; in other words, she is both a student of the pupils and field agent and visitor at their homes. She has already visited the homes of sixty pupils between September, 1917, and June, 1918, mostly during the short vacations when the children were there, and this service was continued during the long summer vacation in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont. Being tactful, she has naturally succeeded in putting the school in touch with the parents as no amount of correspondence and termly reports of their children's progress can do. The message you carry is more potent than the message you send. This new worker has co-operated with the psychologist, who has been measuring the pupils for the past two years and has the latter's reports to help her.

This psychologist has now studied 350 different pupils here and 166 at the New York State School for the Blind, Batavia, all of which records will swell the number so studied elsewhere and form a basis for standardizing a set of mental tests for blind children.

The Director, having been called in counsel touching certain new movements in behalf of the blind, has kept his staff and pupils in touch with them, — the grand project of the government to rehabilitate the war-blinded at Baltimore and that of the Red Cross Institute for the Blind, also at Baltimore, backed by all the funds needed; first, to hunt out and find occupations of any and all kinds which can be carried on without the aid of sight; second, to persuade employers to hire without prejudice candidates recommended for work; and third, to follow up the workers thus placed and to help them make good. In proportion as this latter project can be made to function will the whole status of the blind, civil and military, be lifted.

The topic for special discussion by the Perkins

Alumnæ Association at its 34th annual meeting in June was "How can we lift more and lean less?" Last winter the school body subscribed liberally to the Liberty Loans, the Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A. drives and the Thrift Stamp campaigns; every pupil contributed his bit towards a fund to be sent to Sir Frederick Fraser, Superintendent of the Halifax School for the Blind, to be used for the blinded of the explosion; and the older girls wrote Sir Frederick, offering to care for such of his pupils as he might need to send to Watertown to make room for the many expected newcomers at Halifax, for we have voted to receive temporarily, free of tuition charges, such as he should send. The girls knitted and made many an article for the war uses of the American Red Cross; and they bought a $100 Liberty Bond with the proceeds from a play entitled "Mrs. Tree." The boys repeated their play, "A Midsummer Night's Dream" for the benefit of the Y. M. C. A. and raised thereby $600. Altogether the year was very rich in endeavor.

The Halifax explosion of December 6, 1917, made a powerful appeal to the blind everywhere. Sir Frederick Fraser, being himself blind and a former pupil of Perkins Institution, wrote Mr. Allen most graphic accounts of the catastrophe. Mr. Allen thereupon brought the matter to the attention of the American Red Cross with the result that he was made chairman of an American-Canadian committee to investigate the condition and prospects of the explosion blind and to make report with a program of recommendations for that society to consider carrying out. Mr. Allen went to Halifax in January, remaining three weeks, and later wrote the committee's report and carried it to Washington.

At the time of the final meeting of this committee, which was held at Watertown, the school listened four successive mornings to a moving address by each of the three of its visiting members, — Principal Burritt of the sister school at Overbrook, Pa., Principal Van Cleve of that in New York and Supt. Fraser of that in Halifax, and to one by Supt. Woolston of the sister school for the blind at Jacksonville, Illinois. They were able to listen also to talks and readings by others from time to time, each of which is acknowledged elsewhere in this report. One of these was by Prof. Arlo Bates, an old and dear friend of the institution. Since Prof. Bates has died this fall, it is but meet to make especial acknowledgment of his services to the school. Within the past twenty-eight years, he has given a talk or lecture to the school every year but two, he being out of the country then. His coming has been looked forward to by teachers and pupils, and his evening has been among the most prized and valuable of any.

An event of intimate interest to the institution was the completion and unveiling on November 7 of a bust of our late director, Michael Anagnos. This bust was the last piece of work of the artist, Bela L. Pratt of Boston, and was a gift of gratitude and affection by former pupils of the kindergarten for the blind, of which Mr. Anagnos was founder. The commemorative exercises were held in the main hall of the institution and were most impressive; the unveiling was in Anagnos Court of our lower school.

Again the pleasure and the musical education of our pupils have been augmented through the opportunity of hearing good music, made possible by the foundation of the Maria Kemble Oliver fund, a wise and beneficent gift to this institution. By means of its income tickets have been purchased for the Choral Symphony concerts, those of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Cecelia Society, and the Sunday afternoon concerts at Symphony Hall, the operas given by the Metropolitan Opera Company, and a pianoforte recital by Percy Grainger. Such privileges as these musical events represent to our young people are deeply appreciated.

The special Reference Library of the institution has continued to gather in for present and future uses quantities of material on the subject of war blindness and the re-education of blinded soldiers and sailors. The Howe Memorial Press has kept on embossing books and stories on the great war, which have been widely and eagerly sought and read. The year's circulation of embossed books both inside and outside the institution reached the rather astounding total of 12,711, while the music library reported that sixty-six persons not connected with the school borrowed approximately 700 pieces of music and that the sale of music was unusually large during the past year.

Among this year's publications touching the institution the most unique and unexpected was a little booklet issued by the Angier Chemical Company, constituting an advertisement for that firm but appearing as a write-up of Perkins Institution with excellent views and text. We have been assured that no fewer than 126,675 of these little pamphlets were distributed by mail to a general list of practising physicians and surgeons throughout the United States and Canada and that an additional lot of 6,000 was sent out from the London office of the company to a selected list of similar practitioners in Australia and the British colonies in Africa.

Quite a little energy of the manager and staff of the Howe Memorial Press Fund has gone this year into helping along preparedness for the general introduction of the new and uniform type of embossed reading and writing. They have issued a quantity of various alphabet sheets and cards, run off the press unusually large editions of a school primer for children and one for adults, using plates some of which had been made at the Overbrook school, some at our own. But perhaps the main achievement of the year in this department was its manufacturing of 1,500 Braille slates to meet the anticipated demand for such appliances all over the country. These and other products of this fund when sold are sold at cost. A comparison of the receipts of this with previous years will show increase which may not continue, since the present is really emergency production to supply a need which we are better prepared than any other agency to meet.

At the very delightful gathering of members of the American Association of Instructors of the Blind last June in Colorado Springs, as the guests of the Colorado School for the Deaf and the Blind, a vote was unanimously adopted to make Revised Braille Grade 1½ the official punctographic system of the Association. This was followed by a vote, carried also unanimously, at the July meeting of the trustees of the American Printing House for the Blind at Louisville, whereby it was resolved that all future plates embossed there out of government moneys should be in this uniform system. Thus, seemingly, ends a long controversy over which system or type should prevail for the use of the blind. As we reported last year, the decision represents a happy compromise between what is inherently the most efficient tool for the blind and what it seemed wholly impracticable for them and their workers to unite on. Obviously the soldier blind will be taught this system, and all books to be embossed especially for them will be in it. As for the libraries in the other types, they will continue to circulate until the books are worn out, for many old readers will never be weaned from the old to the new. However, as competition is the life of trade, so the past competition between the rival systems has resulted in an excellency of means and product such as would not have been attained without it. This, too, is a contribution of America to the progress of the world.

Existing agencies for the blind have been called upon to lend of their trained personnel to the government and associated enterprises in behalf of the warblinded, and these agencies have responded generously, as they should do. The Perkins Institution has given leave of absence to the principal teacher of its boys' upper school, Mr. Harold Molter, to be acting educational director of United States General Hospital No. 7, at Baltimore, "where blinded soldiers, sailors and marines in the military service of the United States are being fitted to 'carry on' in the battle of life;" and to Miss Eleanor E. Kelly, our field worker, to join the overseas unit of the Red Cross Institute for the Blind. The six others who have left us for sundry governmental service are as follows: — the psychologist to become a nurse; a gymnastic instructor, an engineer and a gardener to join the A. E. F. abroad; a general man to work in a ship-yard; and a very recent pupil with improved eyesight to become yeoman in the navy.

The mattress, pillow and chair-rebottoming work has continued to come to our workshop for the twenty adults at South Boston in such quantities that, though the wages of the "hands" have been increased in conformity with the demands of the times, yet the business has held its own again, having been conducted without cost to the institution or the public. The exchange from the horse and team to the auto-truck means of transportation of goods has doubtless helped make this result possible.

At the beginning of the current year, October 1, 1918, the number of blind persons registered at the Perkins Institution was 303, twelve less than on the same date of the previous year. This number includes 68 boys and 75 girls in the upper school, 64 boys and 61 girls in the lower school, 15 teachers and officers, and 20 adults in the workshop at South Boston. There have been 62 admitted and 74 discharged during the year.

Within the six years since the institution moved to Watertown no greater change has visited it than the loss of four of the six splendid women who came with it from South Boston to mother an equal number of its new cottage families. Two of these matrons resigned last year because of illness, — Miss Florence M. Stowe, who had presided with grace and devotion for ten years over Eliot Cottage and for five years and a half over May Cottage; and Mrs. Francis E. Carlton, who for over twenty years had presided with marked success over the management of the big building in South Boston and over one of the cottages in Watertown.

PRESENT-DAY FACTORS IN THE SCHOOLS FOR THE BLIND, AS EMPHASIZED AT PERKINS INSTITUTION.¹

I have recently studied the life career of a blind man of remarkable achievements who, when he had sight, had been a roamer and a drifter but whom the oncoming of blindness had stabilized into efficiency. Some twenty years ago there came to the school of which I was Principal a lad of seventeen who had newly lost both eyes and his right arm through a quarry explosion. A year and a half before the accident he had immigrated from southern Italy. He had never attended school there, and he had not learned to read and write even his own language. But, though he had been mutilated, he was attractive because affectionate, eager and brave. He made friends whose goodness he resolved to requite by amounting to something. He has amounted to something; is not merely a remarkable blind man but a remarkable American, well educated, highly useful, respected by all who know him. We used to say, half in earnest, that the fatal charge of dynamite seemed to have entered into his very being and remained his source of power.

The efficiency of these two cases, as of that of Helen Keller, cannot be explained by the word environment, however excellent and stimulating this may have been. To be sure the deaf and blind girl grew up under rather ideal surroundings, especially as to teacher; however, it was the pupil who always pushed ahead and the teacher who held back. But there attended the same schools with these and under identical influences plenty of companions, many of whom would be accounted better off and more promising because less evidently handicapped, and yet they amounted to much less as adults and citizens. What is the explanation? Is it not that the element of efficiency is primarily not physical but mental: — not ears and eyes and arms and legs, but ginger? Military trainers tell me that it is not so much a man's education and opportunities that lead to promotion as it is his natural capacity for leadership.

Now, while we may admit the truth of the above propositions, we will scarcely admit that potentiality is all and that environment is nothing, for we are unable to tell how much a contributory cause of success environment was even in such cases as the three cited. Environment, we believe, is so often a determining factor that educators strive to make the utmost use of it through the instrumentality of the school.

It has long been a theory of mine that visual beauty can exert a shaping effect upon the blind, a hygienic effect that is tremendously worth while. Never mind attempting to explain why this is so, but let us rather accept the statement as of fact. The first institution for the blind which was rehabilitated with simple beauty as one of the architect's requirements was that of Philadelphia. This was in the year 1899. Since then nine others have followed or are about to follow suit; for the Pennsylvania institution was soon seen to have set a pace that must be kept up with.

Within a bare half dozen years its efficiency seemed to have doubled. The single comprehensive explanation is that its atmosphere and influence had become dynamic. It had gone out into the suburbs, provided for a maximum of sunshine and fresh air, surrounded itself with ample grounds, an athletic field, trees, gardens. In short, everything about it was so attractive that it soon became a great resort of visitors, and even the neighborhood that had at first resented the encroachment of an institution came to rejoice in its presence. And this was immediately reflected in the pupils' bearing and in an increased recognition of their opportunities.

One of the first things then for a worker in such a place is to recognize that light, color and visual beauty are tonic elements even with those who have no eyes to see them. The mere consciousness that these elements are present suffices. Besides, if the old adage "as is the teacher, so is the school" be true, and I am convinced it is, it requires attractive surroundings not only to keep the teachers fresh and sweet but to keep them there, — not needing to run away to other scenes for daily refreshment. The superintendent who favors having his teachers live outside, because they can be sources of trouble, does not know the sweetening influences, even to them, of an environment of beauty and concord; and how much these factors count in education that must be kept inspirational. The recent reconstruction of so many residential schools on the cottage plan hardly points to the extinction of the institution as an effective instrumentality of education but rather to the realization of the fact that there can be institutions and institutions.

An educator once said to me: "I perceive that in order for a child to get into the best kind of school for him he must be either black or red or deaf or blind, or an orphan, or at least be something unusual." Perhaps so. Certainly the unusual child needs an unusual environment.

In order to understand something of how the present-day institution for the blind aims to educate its pupils, let us make a considerable visit to one of them, the Perkins Institution, and study its daily life and sense its atmosphere. This residential school is now located at Watertown, Massachusetts, a fair-sized town near enough to Boston and to several colleges to invite mutual visiting. Young people to be fitted for life must experience life conditions while growing up. A few of the children live near enough to be day pupils. More go home over the week ends, and all during the long vacations. The school being necessarily undenominational, all who remain over Sunday attend some local church and Sunday school, where an effort is made to distribute them in classes with other boys or girls. Acquaintances are thus made, and invitations follow as a matter of course. Our pupils go out to call, and their friends come in to see them. They have their own social affairs, musicales, dances and parties, to which they invite their inside and outside friends. These affairs they arrange and conduct entirely by themselves. Many of the pupils go to concerts, lectures and theaters in Boston; and whenever school concerts, lectures and dramatics are given at the institution the public is invited in and comes. Twice have outside amateur dramatic troupes given performances on our stage for the pleasure of the school, and twice have the blind of Greater Boston, including the school pupils, been given special performances on the professional stage.

We have a Camp Fire organization which meets sometimes in one of our cottages, often with a visiting "fire," but sometimes going as visitors to a neighboring town. In 1916 the Council of Camp Fires of the adjacent city of Newton held its annual meeting at the institution, our own "fire" participating. In 1917 Dr. and Mrs. Gulick, after visiting at Watertown, invited our "fire" to participate, first in leading the singing at a large meeting of the organization in Boston and again in the Grand Council Meet of some 2,000 girls from Greater Boston. The local post of Sons of Veterans has this winter of 1917 given four patriotic lectures in the institution hall; and a Watertown music society has given an invitation musicale there. The boys have twice repeated their performance of "The Merchant of Venice" for the benefit of the blinded soldiers abroad and have cleared $900 for them. The girls have done their bit, too, since the opening of the great war, by knitting and making numerous things for the Belgians and for the Red Cross. While speaking of the war let me add that we have been able to assist several women who were anxious to fit themselves for service among the war blinded. One of these women stayed a month with us. We have made for the blinded French over 1,000 adapted table games. The Perkins Institution is glad to be able to serve in any way and at any time. It has exchanged graduate pupils with a great sister school. It has entertained for longer or shorter periods students of the workings of its spirit. It has helped initiate and support classes of semi-sighted children in the public schools of the State. It has made possible sight-saving follow-up work in an eye hospital, and otherwise contributed to the prevention of blindness. Its kindergarten department, being adequately as well as separately endowed makes social service of the kind possible to us. All this keeps the institution in touch with the world outside.

It has been said that the keynote of our civilization is participation, not competition. The spirit of the Perkins Institution is in harmony with this note. It has also been said that the institution's gaze is now "outward, not inward, and that its relation to the world outside is a matter of prime importance in educational procedure."

The atmosphere begotten through its cottage family plan both helps this matter along and is helped by it. I need not dwell upon this plan, though it is the fundamental feature of the new Massachusetts School for the Blind, of which I am speaking. As you know, the 300 possible pupils and the 100 teachers, officers and servants live distributed in 13 families, one of these the little one for the intensive practice of domestic science by the older girls. There is a minimum of servants because everybody contributes to the daily housework. The small bedrooms and dining rooms and pantries, repeated in each cottage as they are, can readily be cared for by the pupils. But the fact that everybody helps has a wonderful effect. A sense of ownership, part proprietorship is fostered, and with this much of the discipline usual in institutions disappears. The buildings are two-story, necessarily covering much ground. The virtue of this is that, while much walking on a level is had daily, there is little up and down stairs. The housework is also facilitated thereby; moreover, there is even less fear of fire than though the construction were merely fire-proof and first-class, which it is. There are no basement or congregate lavatories but two generous ones on the sleeping floors of each cottage, where there are also ample shower-bath facilities for the morning wake-up. There is nothing typical of the old-time congregate institution. Even the administration is reasonably decentralized, there being no single head matron, for instance, but rather twelve of them, each in full charge of her household. When a pupil is ill his matron telephones for the attending physician who goes to her house just as he would to any private house. There is in each of the houses a spare room where the patient, if not very ill, may be kept quiet and cared for by the motherly matron, just as a real mother would do. An occasional guest may occupy this spare room, — either a former pupil, a visitor from another school, a friend of matron or teacher, or some member of a pupil's family. At the time of a recent school play twelve relatives or friends of the boy actors spent the night at the school. All this sort of thing makes for a good wholesome spirit and atmosphere, — a hygienic factor of the first importance, it seems to me.

Hopefulness, a state of mind very important to any one but essential to the blind who make good in anything, is dependent on physical vitality. This matter the new school has recognized by provision in every feature of its layout. The grounds in which all its boarding-school homes are set are ample, as stated. The boys have their boat on the Charles River near by; the girls, theirs on the institution pond. On this pond all hands may skate in winter; but they may enjoy skating in summer weather, too, using roller skates on the gymnasium roof. There a few boys at a time may also play hockey. There is a large central gymnasium and a swimming pool, both very popular. However, in fit weather all hands exercise under teacher leadership in the great out-of-doors, either on the athletic field or in hiking over the country roads. The cottage picnics come regularly in the month of June.

Intercottage contests for the greatest number of points have been held winters in the gymnasium and in June on the athletic field. There has come this spring an invitation to the champions in field sports of four institutions to meet at the Pennsylvania Institution where they will be entertained for three days, on one of which they will compete in running, jumping and shot putting. The school athletic societies will meet traveling expenses.

There is a constant stream of visitors to the school, which fact, however, does not interrupt class-work but rather is made to serve a purpose of the institution, viz., the better mutual acquaintance of the public and the blind. This public, by the way, has got in the habit of dropping in between three and four, afternoons, when the school chorus rehearses. At that time and at the daily morning assembly the great Howe Building is filled with the harmony of song. Who can tell the morally hygienic effect it is to all of us who live, breath and have our being in so much melody?

After morning assembly I speak for a few minutes daily on current events, and you may be sure the topics suggested by the world war have been seized and made as vital as possible. Besides, current events are treated as a school subject, every reasonable effort being made to keep our pupils, whose condition would naturally shut them in, not only in touch with the times but feeling themselves as part of them.

The important functions of the classroom, — teaching young people by means of all the common English branches through high school, — are emphasized through demand for good work. And little excursions are even made into sociological topics and astronomy, — the latter seeming to broaden the conceptions of intellectual and moral laws. While these class studies are varied and balanced by the abundant activities of manual training, and music, and physical exercise, the central factor of all is that of socialized education as participated in through living together and learning how to do so harmoniously and efficiently. Is it not true that a good mixer at school will the more likely remain a good mixer after school days? At any rate Perkins Institution strives and struggles to have its pupils grow up to be as much like other people as possible; and to a certain encouraging extent it succeeds. While its older pupils study and study hard, the vocational pursuits open to them, — such as the handicrafts, housework, school and piano teaching, business salesmanship, and piano tuning, — the majority of those who finish its course making good in life, — nevertheless, the emphasis while at school is for every one to be and become a contributing member of the institutional society. Its community, furnishing as it does one seeing adult to every three of its pupils, is a pretty normal community. There is the spur of making good in whatever department of the school one may be in; but just so there is the spur of being acceptable every day and everywhere. The ideal of efficiency and the ideal of acceptability are held continuously before the pupils, and they can not but come to see the vital importance of attaining them. The Perkins graduate associations, the alumni and the alumnae, are welcome visitors, for the administration recognizes there is no more forceful encouragement to its pupils than examples of the efficient blind themselves.

As it is difficult for even the trained blind to get employment, the institution tries to place those for whom it can find chances. Knowing this the pupils labor with redoubled ardor and perseverance. Working now with the institution is a placement agent of the Massachusetts Commission for the Blind, whose success in securing jobs has become a factor of utmost encouragement.

The ideal of the school is not that of knowing but rather that of being and of doing. And it works, making as it does for that continued state of mind, an all-important psychological factor, resulting in life efficiency.

Let me, then, summarize what I consider the present-day factors in the education of the blind, as emphasized at Watertown. These are:

A beautiful, healthful environment.

The cottage family plan. Pupils divided into small groups with one housemother, four teachers, all living together as one.

Contributory housework on the part of teachers, officers and pupils.

Physical exercise to increase independence and vitality.

Ample opportunity through many departments to keep all pupils busy at varied and balanced work.

Hopeful aspirations and confidence definitely encouraged through morning talks and keeping the student body in touch with successful alumni andumnæ.

Pupils kept in touch with the world outside through simple social communication and as close association with their homes as possible.

Training for society through unselfish, helpful living with one's fellows.

Keeping in touch with former pupils as much as possible with efforts to place such as we are able.
